Pete Fox Announces Campaign for Wyoming House District 56

5/26/2026

Casper, Wyoming —Pete Fox has officially announced his candidacy to represent the residents of Wyoming State House District 56 in Casper.

Fox graduated from the University of Wyoming with a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering spending his career within the oil & gas sector gaining both domestic and international experience.

Retiring several years ago, Fox returned home to Casper with his wife, Lijuan, currently working as a substitute teacher in Natrona County schools, and their son.

A longtime Casper resident, husband, father and current Natrona County Republican

Precinct Committeeman, Fox said he is running because “Wyoming families need leaders laser-focused on improving and protecting our State”.

“House District 56 deserves strong, balanced representation that reflects the full breath of our community, not simply the belief system of a district's representative. District 56 is one of the most politically diverse districts in our State supporting people across our entire social and economic spectrum. They deserve a representative who listens broadly, works hard and focuses squarely on solving real problems.”

“This race is not about personalities—it’s about effective representation. After watching the direction of the Legislature and reviewing the issues facing Wyoming families, I believe our district needs a representative employing a wide-angle lens, focused on practical solutions, fiscal responsibility, and smart long-term economic growth.”

“I’m a republican, easily earning the party's new endorsement monogram standing for 80% of the party platform. More importantly, I'll vote in the Legislature as a moderate. Voting at either side's extremes misrepresents District 56 and disenfranchises the majority of our constituents.”

“The middle class and younger generations really need help.” Fox stated. To address this, his campaign will focus on three major priorities:

1. Protect Wyoming Citizens:

Fox highlighted affordability challenges, healthcare costs and disparate property tax issues being among the various drivers increasing pressure on working people, families, retirees, and young parents.

“Too many residents feel like they’re working harder just to keep their heads above water. One remedy is enacting policies that help Wyoming citizens keep more of what they earn.”

2. Grow Wyoming Jobs and Opportunities:

Fox believes another remedy is to aggressively pursue new economic opportunities while protecting both our legacy industries and world-class natural treasures.

“With trillions of dollars in mainstreet manufacturing and business investment now pouring back into our country, Wyoming should be aggressively competing for those jobs while jealously protecting our one-of-a-kind Statewide beauty. We need SMART growth that strengthens our middle class and creates opportunities that entice our children and grandchildren to stay here.”

3. Protect Wyoming’s Resources and Future:

Drawing on decades of experience in the energy industry, Fox says Wyoming must carefully manage growing demands on water and power infrastructure.

“We have tremendous opportunities ahead, but we must ensure growth benefits Wyoming residents without placing unnecessary burdens on our communities, resources, or pristine environment.”

“I’m running because I believe Wyoming’s best days are calling” Fox said.

“Capturing success requires serious leadership and thoughtful planning from both the government and private sectors. I’m prepared to serve and ready to roll up my sleeves and get to work.”

Fox said he plans on meeting directly with voters during his campaign through community events, town halls, and direct outreach across House District 56.
